Check out our recommendations for this collection, selected by our editors! Movement, motor skills, and sensory information ... and more! * * * 1. We all know that we "really" feel muscles and skin in action. This happens when one does some kind of physical labor. But when we observe "real" human muscles and skin, we tend not to assume that they can also show emotion. That's why we bring you this video, which shows the "real" emotions (using a few facial muscles and gestures) conveyed by a person who exercises.
