development. Angiotensin II (AngII) exerts its effects by binding with high affinity to the AngII type 1 receptor (AT1R), which is also present in the neocortex during early development. In the present study, we examined the expression of the AT1R gene, AT1R protein, and AT1R mRNA in the neocortex during the development of mice and compared the distribution of AT1R immunoreactivity with that of a marker of glial cells, glial fibrillary acidic protein (GFAP). In adult mice, abundant AT1R-like immunoreactivity was observed in the cytoplasm of neuronal cells, whereas AT1R mRNA was expressed in neurons and glial cells. At postnatal day (PND) d0c515b9f4
