* Layer groups. Photoshop's three basic editing tools—layers, masks, and adjustment layers—work together. Each of these has a distinct purpose, and they all must be used to make a photo look realistic in different ways. The Layers panel is the bread and butter of the Photoshop editing process. By combining the different tools, you can get some amazing effects. For example, the layers tool enables the creation of a color-layer group that you can manipulate independently, just as you would a color painting in a traditional painting software such as Painter. Each time you add a layer to a layer group, a new version of the layer is created. Layers groups let you access your layers by creating and editing the layers within the group. When you click the Layers panel in the top panel of the Photoshop workspace, the panel opens to display a list of layers with the number of the current layer in the list. If you're just starting out with Photoshop and you've not used the Layers panel yet, don't worry, it will take some time to become accustomed to working in this workspace. The most important thing to remember is that there are two ways to access layers: through the Layers panel or through a menu. It's generally the best to remember the Layers panel for editing your images, and then the menu for when you need to access more than one layer at a time. * Masks. Whether you're using a Photoshop plug-in or creating layers in Photoshop, you'll almost always need a mask (generally known as a layer mask). A mask defines which pixels are transparent and which are opaque. A mask enables you to create a visual object by using transparency (see Figure 21-1). You can use masks to create effects such as color overlays, change the subject's background, or make a particular object pop out of the background. You can select all of the pixels in the area that you want to make opaque, creating a solid visual object; or you can select all of the pixels that you want to be transparent, leaving the area in front visible. You need to use the selection tools or the Quick Selection tool to select the area that you want the mask to cover. You can then make the changes you need to make to the area in the layer mask. When you select an area in the mask and then press Ctrl+D (Windows) or Command+D (Mac), the selected area turns transparent and the layer mask

Q: Jquery conflict with MVC Ajax I have 2 issues when I integrate a MVC website on a Website... Issue 1 : When I open a modal window, I need to call a function that I use to render a partial view on the modal.js, but problem is that the Ajax call doesn't work anymore. Issue 2: I have implemented JQuery in several views of the website, the issue is that those jquery functions are not working anymore. Here is the modal function in modal.js // Create an instance of the Model var Model = new function(){ var obj = $(this); this.Tasks= new Ajax.Pjax.Request('@Url.Action("TaskNew", "Tasks", new { id = obj.data("TasksId") })'); this.Tasks.updateRequest = new Ajax.Updater('divContainer', '@Url.Action("TaskNew", "Tasks", new { id = obj.data("TasksId") })', { method: 'post', parameters: { accessor: "1", message: "hello" }, update: "divContainer", evalScripts: "true", onFailure: function (request, status) { alert('error'); }, onComplete: function (request, status) { alert('success'); } } }); // Open the modal. this.setVisible(); // Set a css class to the dialog this.setClass(); }; The function setVisible() is defined in a MVC partial view @RenderPartial("Tasks") : function setVisible() { $("#tasksModal").modal('show'); } The modal function is called on a button click on a view. The Ajax code is also in a view.

The Boy Scouts of America will allow openly gay youths to join if they're at least 18 years old, and a vote is held. After a board meeting on Monday, the organization announced in a statement that "all youth members, regardless of gender or sexual orientation, will be treated equally by Scout law and oath." It also pledged to "not engage in discrimination toward youth members or membership applicants," and said a vote will be held by the end of May to allow "all youth members to determine whether or not to admit individuals in open membership based upon their sexual orientation and gender identity." The organization first announced in May 2012 that it would allow gays who were 14 or older to join — a decision that came amid increasing public pressure and hundreds of alumni calling for an end to the ban. "Now that the vote is complete, our hope is that one day soon all youth members everywhere will be treated equally, and are respected just for who they are," said Robert Lucente, the organization's chief scout executive. "We look forward to continuing to work with anyone who shares our mission and core values, and the best interests of the youth we serve."Synthetic peptide mimics of sequence 49-58 of hepatitis C virus NS5A, including its biological activity: inhibition of hepatitis C virus replication in cell cultures. The replication of hepatitis C virus (HCV) is an attractive target for the development of novel antiviral agents. An active region of the HCV NS5A protein, NS5A(49-58), was identified. This region is highly conserved and contains functionally important residues that are predicted to adopt alpha-helical structure. A 29-residue peptide (named NS5A-peptide) corresponding to this region was designed. The biological activity of NS5A-peptide was evaluated with regard to its effects on the replication of HCV in both Huh-7 cells (a human hepatoma cell line) and Jc1-9 cells (a cell culture-derived HCVcc), which supports the full range of HCV replication. NS5A-peptide inhibited the replication of HCV in both cell types in a concentration-dependent manner. Furthermore, NS5A-peptide showed a stronger inhibitory effect on the replication of genotype 1b HCV than that of genotype 1a HCV. The
